

Paschalis Paschidis studied history in the University of Athens, where he got his MA (1996) and PhD (in 2003) in Ancient History. He has been working at the National Hellenic Research Foundation since 1995, since 2006 as a researcher. His research and publications focus on Greek epigraphy (especially in Macedonia), on history, institutions and politics in the Hellenistic period and on identities in the Roman world. He has collaborated with various universities and research institutions in Greece and abroad and teaches in the MA Programme "Classical Archaeology and the Ancient History of Macedonia" of the International Hellenic University since 2015.